in court for five minutes, after which Judge Taylor ordered Bob Ewell to keep his testimony as part of his use of Christian English if possible. Qualification (if possible) is an implicit critique of Bob Ewell's excruciating vocabulary. It is not always true that people who swear or use racist language do so because they are not to express themselves in other ways, but in the case of Bob Ewell, this may be true. For the reader, this phrase black negro can be shocking, but it is necessary to show that in a city of racists, Bob Ewell goes even further than the worst of all others. Back to the top, the White is Jem. Mr. Nathan Radley (Chapter 6) is not like Bob Ewell, who gives an outlet to his hatred, but rather shows his prejudices in stereotypes about all intruders as black people. He clearly knows that Jem was in his garden and shot at his head to scare him. He relies on Ms. Stephanie, Maycomb's gossip columnist, to convey his message that he's scared of paleness, and if anyone sees a white black man around, it's Harper Lee that leaves the question open to what's worse - the cool institutional racism of Maycomb that Nathan Radley writes, or the extreme emotional racism of individuals like Bob Ewell. The novel evokes both attitudes, but it's the really ordinary Maycomb people who seal Tom Robinson's fate. Bob Ewell does their dirty work for them, but he's deluding himself into getting some personal status from him: He thought he was going to be a hero, but everything he got for his pain... Okay, we're going to convict this, but we're going back to our dump, Atticus says.
